

£20.00 | Hardback | 28th August 2014

‘A powerful and compelling account of professional nursing during the First World War. Immensely readable, Veiled Warriors presents an eloquent appraisal of nursing’s vital contribution to the care of wounded service personnel and its role in wider medical efforts. Christine Hallett has used some incredibly strong individual stories to illustrate her case and poses a masterful challenge to many of the myths that exist about nursing during the conflict.’

Dr Peter Carter OBE,
Chief Executive & General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing

Self-sacrificing heroines, romantic foils to the male combatants, and doctors’ handmaidens – the mythology that grew up around First World War Nurses distorted their real position as trained professionals performing significant work in their own right.

Christine Hallett examines the reality behind the myths, using evidence from archives throughout the world. She offers a compelling account of nurses’ wartime experiences and a clear appraisal of their work and its contribution to the allied cause on both the Western and the Eastern Fronts. As working women in a sometimes hostile, chauvinistic world, allied nurses fought hard to gain recognition for their profession and political rights that gave women a more powerful voice in the post-war world.

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Photography by Neal Rylatt

CHRISTINE HALLETT is Professor of Nursing History at the University of Manchester and Chair of the UK Association for the History of Nursing. She was the founding Chair of the European Association for the History of Nursing, and has published extensively on the subjects of nursing education, clinical nursing, and the history of wartime nursing. She holds Fellowships of both the Royal Society for the Arts and the Royal Society of Medicine.

Available through all good bookshops and online or order direct

01536 452640 trade.orders.uk@oup.com